

Marist Fashion Designers Go Red for Women

The Marist College Fashion Program has joined forces with the Dutchess Ulster American Heart Association for the “Red Dress Project” to help create awareness about heart disease, women’s number-one health threat. The red dress is the AHA’s national symbol for the fight against heart disease. Senior fashion design students from Marist designed and created a collection of red cocktail dresses to help bring attention to the cause. Project funding was sponsored by the YMA Fashion Fund.

The completed dresses will be exhibited at the American Heart Association’s first Dutchess-Ulster “Go Red for Women Luncheon on Friday, February 27, 2009 at the Poughkeepsie Grandview, as well as the Marist College Silver Needle Fashion Show & Awards on Friday, May 8, 2009 at the Mid-Hudson Civic Center.
