

Summer 2025

Dear Students:

Welcome to The History of Photography on-line course. I hope that you will gain a much better appreciation for the medium after our eight weeks together.

It is important for each of you to remember that this course takes the traditional 15-week semester and reduces it to 8 weeks. Given the fact that we start this course soon after the end of the Spring semester, your break from traditional class work will be short!

While the material in this course is not difficult to comprehend, to successfully complete The History of Photography, you will need to remember that it is impossible to slack off for a few days and then think that you can pick up and succeed.

With that said, we will be rapidly going through our textbook Seizing the Light: A Social History of Photography – Ed.4. It will be important for you to stay current with all reading assignments, quizzes, discussions, and other assignments. As I mentioned before, this class requires constant participation. But the end results will give each of you tools to take with you as you encounter photographic images during the rest of your life, and new ways of looking at visual images

This course is set up on Brightspace. Once the class opens, the Syllabus link will give you a full layout of the course. There is a lot to accomplish in the class; you will have to organize your time effectively to complete the readings with enough time to reflect on questions that I pose to you. You will also be fully involved in our on-line discussions which you will do in small groups.

If I were in a face-to-face classroom setting, I would begin by introducing myself and asking all of you to do the same. Since we will be engaging with one another online, it is even more important that we identify ourselves to provide a character beyond our name. When we start the course, I will have a Discussion set up where each of you will be required to introduce yourself. While I will give a more complete introduction of myself then, I will quickly give you some highlights now:

I have been a lecturer in the art history department at Marist for 29 years having taught a range of courses including Art of the Western World, History of Modern Sculpture, Arts & Values and Museum Studies. I have taught the classroom and online versions of The History of Photography for the past 24 years. I was the one who purposed this course be offered at Marist. While many colleges and universities offer history of photography courses today, when this class first started 24 years ago, it was quite a unique feature for the Art Department here at Marist. Today there are many history books to choose from; 24 years ago, there was virtually nothing!

If you haven't gathered, my specialty is the history of photography and my major research interests include both 19th Century British female photographers and contemporary American photography (1960 - onwards). I have spent a good portion of my life at both the Victoria & Albert Museum Library and the British Museum Library (both in London) doing in-depth research. I have also spent a good amount of time at the Marist College branch campus in Florence, Italy conducting research at The British Institute which is based in this Renaissance city. Last summer I have my second study grant to go to The Getty Museum and Research Center in Los Angeles to continue my research.

We will use the following book that is available at the Marist College Bookstore or on-line at any one of the many booksellers one may encounter, or you can get the digital version if you like:

*Seizing the Light: A Social History of Photography (4th Edition), by Robert Hirsch
McGraw Hill
ISBN: 978-1138944251 [paperback]

- It is critical that you secure this book immediately so that you are ready to begin your reading on the first day of class.

 Also: Please note that if you are going away on holiday this summer, it is critical that you have internet access! I will not consider the excuse that you were at a place that did not have internet access as a reason why you could not complete an assignment. Remember, if you sign up for an on-line course, you are expected to have on-line access at all times!

If you need to reach me before the class begins, you can e-mail at Marist at:

I look forward to meeting you online! We will be hearing a lot from each other!
