

History

The study of history is fundamentally concerned with understanding how and why societies change over time. The historical method encourages the development of a sense of context, perspective and coherence, while also identifying complexity and ambiguity. The discipline provides a framework for understanding the human condition, and it exposes students to different values and societies. Core history courses emphasize the diversity of interpretations in the study of the discipline.

Please note: (1) A cross-listed course can only satisfy ONE breadth requirement within the Core. For example, HIST 217 Catholics in the U.S. can fulfill the History or the Social Science or the Ethics & Justice breadth requirement, but not all three at once; (2) Some special-topics courses might fulfill the History breadth requirement; (3) Many history courses work in particular Pathways as well as fulfilling this breadth requirement. See the Pathway course lists on the Marist Core website for more information. Always check your audit as course applicability may change.

Discipline	Courses that typically fulfill the History breadth requirement
History	Any 100- or 200-level history course (except HIST 209L). 300-level history courses may also be used to fulfill this requirement, but you must have earned 6 history credits before taking a 300-level history course.
