

2024–2025 Student Campus Climate Survey

Marist participated in the 2024–2025 Student Campus Climate Survey in November of 2024 to better understand undergraduate students' experiences and perceptions related to campus climate, safety, sexual misconduct prevention and education, reporting, and institutional response.

Overall, the results indicate generally positive perceptions of the campus climate, particularly regarding students feeling valued, respected, and safe. Students also reported that reports of sexual misconduct would be taken seriously and that support would be available to students who make a report.

The results also identify opportunities for continued education, outreach, and improvement. Marist will continue conversations around consent, including consent expectations, healthy relationships, and students' understanding of sexual misconduct prevention.

Additionally, the results point to an opportunity to improve understanding of the distinction between perceived incidents and incidents that are reported and proceed through a formal resolution process. Clear communication about the TIX process can help address misconceptions and strengthen students' understanding of how the University responds to concerns.

Marist will use these findings to inform ongoing prevention, education, outreach, and response efforts and to foster a campus environment where all students understand consent, their rights and protections, available resources, and reporting options.
